For the past 25 years, Bowers has built a reputation for stress-free renovations and new home building. “This industry has such a bad reputation,” says Wilma Bowers, co-owner. “There are many talented craftsmen out there that just do not know how to run an effective business.”

Bowers’ construction experience demonstrates that there is no reason for major surprises, extended schedules or unexpected costs. She is disappointed that many homeowners think this is what you have to endure to renovate or build a new home. “At Bowers Design Build, our project management prowess is just as critical as our award-winning design and construction talent,” she says. Bowers’ projects begin with a proprietary survey about how the client lives, plays, entertains and works so that design solutions can be customized.

They utilize Microsoft Project Management software to give clients a roadmap of the design process, the selection process and the construction process. “It is our job to be the construction experts and to anticipate every possible twist and turn of the project,” Bowers says, “including where your furniture will go, and therefore, where you’ll need a light switch or electrical outlet.”

Construction by its very nature is complex. For a homeowner to order construction materials, provide their own labor or supervise a subcontractor to save a dollar makes no sense to Bowers, who says, “Time is money and the frustration of a poorly managed construction project can cause unneeded aggravation and certainly dampens what should be a exciting experience.”

Bowers’ design build process makes their company 100 percent accountable, ensuring that their clients have a great experience, which includes a fantastic design, seamless construction and a beautiful home that truly works for the client and the family. “Choosing Bowers Design Build means no regrets,” she says. “That’s our promise.”
